Excerpt: . . . etc. The tone is impartial and the treatment admirably concrete. Under the title, Florentine Letters, Grace Hanford Frisby has brought out a pleasant book, through Ryders, which will appeal especially to tourists contemplating a journey to Italy. The Singular Illiss Smith, published by the Macmillan Company, has won a strong popularity, due in part to cleverness in the telling and in part to the fact that it turns on the servant question. The Singular Miss Smith is a great heiress who works for some months as a servant in various homes to discover for herself, by practical experience, the servants side of the great American problem. The hook does not throw any special light on the solution of this, but it makes interesting reading. The author is F. N. Kingsley. All materials may be included in the choice of winter gowns. For the street both rough and smooth cloths will be fashionable, as well as the velvets already referred to. In the home not only will silks and satins be worn, but many new varieties of voile, chiffon cloth, and the same light-weight fabrics as were used this last summer, and even batiste and chiffon will find a place in theatre and house gowns. With so many different styles of gowns as are now considered requisite, the color question has a wide field, and not for many a season have there been so many different colors displayed. Clothes this winter are bound to be...
