Iron subjected to the cold-rolling process has its breakingstrain greatly increased by being made extremely hard, and not by being consolidated, as previously supposed. 46. Specimens cut out of crank-shaft are improved by additional hammering. 47. The galvanizing or tinning of iron plates produces no sensible effects on plates of the thickness experimented on. The results, however, may be different should the plates be extremely thin. 48. The breaking-strain is materially affected by the shape of the specimen. Thus, the amount borne was much less when the diameter was uniform for some inches of the length than when confined to a small portion, --a peculiarity previously unascertained and not even suspected. 49. It is necessary to know correctly the exact conditions under which any tests are made, before we can equitably compare results obtained from different...
